The rise and fall
Of the names written on the wall
They touched you
And you touched them all

Nothing lasts forever
Or stays the same People live
And then they're gone one day
Names on the wall
The rise and fall

They touched you
And you touched them all
The rise and fall
The rise and fall

As usual, the Pioneers looked good and sounded good in this year's AppleJack parade. For me it was the largest crowd and the longest parade I've attended... anywhere... even in Nebraska City. The weather was probably part of the reason. And of course it was "Battle-of-the-Bands" day.

Nebraska City's Lourdes Catholic High School played football against Bruning-Davenport/Shickley High School in Peru's "Oakbowl" Friday, September 14th. This reception by Lourdes was early in the game. For me it was the best part.

Hitchhiker

by Janet Sobczyk

Student photographer drives onto dirt road seeks countryside view as prized camera waits on bucket seat.

Tires throw up gusts of dust in wake of Dodge Colt sport stripes race up its white hood across the doors, matching a red vinyl top.

First stop, click, click, click!
Ancient barn, amid tall weeds one side leans in too tired to stand much longer.

Next stop, click, click!
Silhouette of wooden windmill one arm missing turns slowly above rows of corn.

Last stop, click!
Cattle crossing sign points the way for herd of goats, shepherded by efficient Border Collie and weary farm boy.

Turn back toward town
driver lost in thought eager to develop negatives.

Thudding on windshield jolts back to reality... a swarm grasshoppers!

Glass covered with insect hitchhikers driver, squeamish turns on wipers watches hoppers swept off glass.

One gets caught in blade rides back and forth left, right kicking, writhing.

Driver halts the wipers stops the torture hurries home asks Dad to release tiny captive.

Now it's a city bug!

I've always appreciated the Milkweed plant.
Mainly because Monarchs need it.

I saw very few Monarchs this Summer, but Fall migration has been uplifting.

HONEYCREEK CEMETERY. Halfway between Peru and Brownville, east of highway 67 there is a cemetery. Half a mile south of Honey Creek there is a hillside pasture with an open gate, a steep trail and a metal sign stating: ABANDON CEMETERY. That first word should have been ABANDONED. The pasture is a five acre rectangle and the cemetery is a three acre rectangle that lies on the hilltop east of the pasture and about 100 feet higher than the creek.

In the cemetery there are 17 headstones with legible names and 5 graves that are marked with rocks or pieces of concrete. Headstones show last names of six Vanderfords, three Snyders, one each of Clark, Brewer, Swan, Edwards, Harper Wennihan, Sumner and Rumerfield. The last two names mentioned may have been the first two buried as the stones were uncut rocks and the names were inscribed with perhaps a knife. Whoever carved the name Sumner made the n backwards. The carver of Rumerfield ran out of space and placed the ld below Rumerfie. These two stones have no inscribed dates.

The earliest death date is 1861 and the most recent was 1939. There were 8 burials before 1867 when the land was bought for one dollar from George Clark, the same year Nebraska became a state. After the three acres were purchased, the three Snyder graves were placed west of the cemetery and it was later realized an error had been made. At that time, in 1912, a tenth of an acre, the Renfro addition, was added at a cost of sixteen dollars. The addition is a nearly square parcel but much narrower than the three acre rectangle.

Five markers show ages under three years old and three more are thought to be children but have no inscriptions. Two dates of deaths were the same, Kate Edwards aged 26 years and Eva Harper aged Infant both died on April 3, 1868. The mother of Eva was an Edwards so Kate may have been Eva's aunt. Perhaps both died in an accident. The following ages are of older people, 45, 57, 71, 71, 76, 81 and 88.

Some of the stones were made of marble in Brownville and have the name of the stone cutter, Neidhart, on the lower part that was below grade before the stone fell over. Much of this information and photos of the headstones are available on the internet. The website is findagrave.com. Some of the graves have been mapped and locations documented by John and Bonnie Robbins. A three ring binder showing their work is in the Nemaha County Museum. Until next month, keep the coffee perking.

Two Bikers

By Janet Sobczyk

Seen in the city...

One biker clamps steel water bottle onto thin titanium frame smooths hair, twists into a pony caps it with aerodynamic helmet clicks chin strap adjusts fuscia tank over black bike shorts sets wrist monitor, grasps handlebars sweeps tanned muscular leg over leather saddle slips right foot into toe clip pushes off expertly, thinking about her next race.

The other trudges in wrinkled jeans and sweatshirt wind-breaker tied around waist pushes rickety bike uphill jimmy-rigged to a wagon heaped with garbage bags containing meager possessions weathered face strains with effort uncombed hair flops on slumping shoulders she stops, reaches for plastic bottle in handlebar basket sips tap water sparingly, sighs resumes pushing, to find a place to sleep tonight.

MOON FROST

The golden eye from a cold, dark sky sneaks over rolling, frozen hills and stares at us. The air is icy damp and has blossomed into crystals growing on every pewter surface that we can see as the full light of the rising moon turns into molten silver. The earth is covered by a softness that lies about the deadly freeze underneath it's baby fuzz. This scene is only free to see for those who value beauty over danger.

THE PLAYING FIELDS

Out there behind the school lies a field full of hopes and dreams and tears and loses. Every year there are new players coming up to challenge the stars and the records from other times. It is a timeless place to be, because it never changes although it is always different. Memories of single plays or games or teammates will remain as bright as the lights on the night turf, when the smells and sights and sounds of competition were as raw and intense as the pain of injuries or the incomparable joy of winning. The games are all mixed together with the emotions of young men who are learning how to live and love and become adults who can take care of themselves.

SUNSHINE CLEAN

There are people shapes clinging to a clothesline. A hot, dry wind rips at them, but they don't want to go. Slim slacks kick back, and shirts' long arms punch and flail. A flannel robe is dancing next to shorts, as seasons over-lap when time moves on. Clothespins win the wind battle, and all these empty clothes will be super dry and smelling sunshine clean, better than a dryer in a metal box.

HALLOWED GROUND

If you went to summer camp and saw shapes in the shadows dancing beyond the bonfire, you were ready to believe that what you think you saw was real. And maybe it wasn't an illusion after all. Who knows exactly what is true and what is not? Perhaps the ghosts or essence of the people who once lived in the spaces that we now occupy have never left. We might simply share the place in different ways. Sacred sites could be anywhere at all, and we may one day stay awhile ourselves, becoming filmy phantoms of the people that we were.

FLAME OUT

There are flames in the hills, but they aren't burning. The time has come for the last of the summer leaves to dance in the wind before they fall. Green has surrendered to the chilled breath of autumn, and colors spread over the fields in shades of fire without any heat. Even on a damp and soggy day, with wisps of fog floating close to the ground, leaves seem brighter, with their wet, waxy surfaces shimmering and shivering in the cold drafts creeping in and out of the timber. It is a grand finale to harvest season, an Indian Summer time to savor the sweet soft air and dry and crackling scents that last only until a winter kill of storm hits, ripping the last of the gold away with icy claws, ending our infatuation with a dream.

THE DIVIDE

It's not a line that you can walk across, but you can feel it in the air, when fall splits off from summer. Nothing stays the same as daylight dims and nights seem longer than they are. Green is gone and snow is white and wind has no color but it feels like dying. Clouds come over and they stay too long, so that sunshine seems to have forgotten how to shine. Our moods all change and nothing is the same. It happens every year but is always a complete surprise. We have to play along and eventually we adapt, until we have to change again, forever.

A Farmhouse in the City

by Janet Sobczyk

It kept popping up in my real estate searches, even though it wasn't the ranch style we needed. A 1925 Tudor farmhouse, updated in the 1980's. I couldn't possibly buy it, but clicked through the photos repeatedly. A few of the rooms looked exactly as expected. Other rooms left me confused.

Expected: two small, old, tiled bathrooms with cheap, metal medicine cabinets. Two upstairs bedrooms with angled ceilings and simple light fixtures. A kitchen with oversized fridge, two ovens, old cupboards, and a farm-style sink.

Unexpected: the large, elegant dining and living rooms with pale, white-washed wood floors to match the walls and painted woodwork. They contained built-in display cases, crystal chandeliers, an antique-white and gold piano, and lovely fireplace. In a farmhouse?! In the photos these two rooms had an ethereal look, as if the ghosts of ladies and gentlemen in powdered wigs and formal attire still gather there to socialize.

Another unexpected room was a large, angular addition with a smooth, parquet wood floor on one half, and rough, stone flooring on the other. The high ceiling was rimmed with modern windows, and geometric wood inlay. Library-sized bookshelves, a bricked-over fireplace, and cabinets that contained a wet bar lined one wall. The lighting left me guessing how the room had been used. There was track lighting above the parquet floor, and two stained-glass chandeliers over the stone floor. I couldn't imagine how it had been furnished.

A third unusual room had a rich, dark wood inlaid ceiling with an art-deco light fixture. It had four doors in it. Maybe it was a bedroom or a study.

I felt inexplicably drawn to this old home and visited it online often. Then an open house posting popped up. I had to go! My two adult daughters, also intrigued by the photos, joined me.

From the curb, it lacked appeal. Peeling paint, cracked window panes, and unkempt landscape probably drove away most lookers. Not us. Curiosity insisted on a viewing.

We strolled through each room, admiring unique features like intricate metal light-switch plates, and imagining this home in its prime. The realtor explained that the family who'd lived there for 60 years, loved to entertain. The addition was a ballroom. Of course! There probably had been game tables under the stained-glass lights. Actually, it would fit a pool table perfectly. And we found one! In the creepy basement. Perhaps antique, it had ornately carved wood legs, and leather pockets with gold braid tassels. Ironically, it stood on concrete flooring near mouse bait and droppings.

The room with four doors had been the master bedroom. One door led to the hall, two were walk-in closets and the fourth was a dead-bolted door to the garage. Odd. The garage had obviously been an addition, too.

My favorite view inside the house was walking from the farm kitchen through a swinging door to the dining/living rooms. It created a jolt to the senses like Dorothy opening her door to Munchkin-land. I had to go through it three times.

Meanwhile, my daughters gazed out the kitchen window and discussed the view. They speculated that a house in the distance on a hill might have been the closest neighbor when this farmhouse was built. We stopped to imagine the rolling hillside covered with crops and a dirt road.

The farmhouse still stood on $\frac{3}{4}$ acre, equal to three lots, but the farmland had been sold long ago and turned into a neighborhood of cracker-box houses. The main road along its north side had evolved into a busy, five-lane Omaha street with fast food restaurants and gas stations.

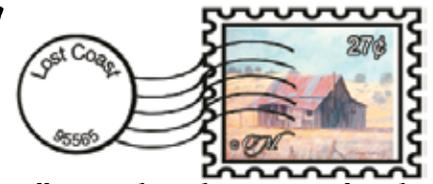

The neighborhood didn't hide its age well; homes were deteriorating and litter dotted the lawns. It had become a shady part of town. We'd noticed three bullet holes in the upstairs bedroom window with dismay.

This poor old home didn't stand a chance. Anyone with enough money to buy it and fix it up wouldn't want to live here. The listing mentioned the possibility of re-zoning the three lots for commercial purposes. Maybe apartments. That would likely be the outcome. I walked away, still envisioning this home remodeled and hosting parties again. Too bad it was literally in the wrong place, at the wrong time.

A Gem of a Story -- Unbelievable, but True!

By Vicki O'Neal

Now folks—I've told you some unbelievable, yet true stories, but I've never told you a more "historically important" story than the one you're about to hear. It's the true story of two Midwestern Gals who both ended up on the West Coast. And when they ran into one another, it set off an unusual chain of events.

I'm speaking of Yours-truly, and my friend Diane, of course. She's quite a character!

I met Diane on the mountainous West Coast where she'd been prospecting for Gemstones—but I soon had to help her through one of the most heart-breaking trials of her life.

On August 31, 2017, Diane received terrible news via her cell phone. Her beloved daughter, Nikki, had just died in Illinois, several thousand miles away. It was a truly tragic day, and yet it turned out to be a rather "blessed" day, as well.

After her daughter died, Diane went prospecting to take her mind off her grief. It was then that she stumbled upon a transparent, emerald green stone hidden in the dirt on a mountainside. It looked "heart-shaped", and it was beautiful. Inside the stone were strange shapes which appeared to be pre-historic, fossilized sea-creatures. Diane believed it truly was One-of-a-Kind...Possibly the only "fossilized emerald" on Earth.

Diane immediately called it the "Nikki Emerald" after her deceased daughter. Diane considered it to be a precious "consolation-gift" from the good Lord above!

I was glad that Diane had found something to comfort her grieving heart. But to tell you the truth, folks, I myself wasn't sure that the "Nikki" was even a gemstone—let alone a fossilized Emerald! I'm no prospector, and to me, it looked like a chunk of green glass with strange shapes inside.

But I didn't tell Diane, of course. I let her think whatever she wanted. At least it distracted her mind from the loss of her daughter.

After that, Diane and I went traveling together—two Midwestern gals who had bumped into one another, by "chance". We went camping here and there, visiting the sea coast and Redwoods...All the while, we were toting around this emerald-green stone, which Diane believed to be worth several million dollars (according to the Internet.)

The stone went to the ocean with us. It went to Church with us, and to Yard Sales. It fell in the dirt... And once, it got lost. What a panic-stricken day that was for my dear friend, Diane. She nearly melted down—but miraculously, we found the stone again.

Diane remained utterly convinced that this was the rarest of Emeralds and we simply needed to find someone who agreed!

But few others were as convinced. The stone was so unusual, no one was sure what Diane had found, especially since prehistoric urchins are not normally embedded inside of gemstones!

We ended up taking the stone to the "Gem and Mineral Museum" and to several other prestigious places. Most of the curators scoffed at us and turned us away without even looking at the stone under a microscope. But Diane was undeterred and undaunted.

Finally, Diane took her rock to both Zales and Kay's Jewelers. There she met with certified gemologists who agreed to look at the stone beneath a microscope. They soon became very excited They returned from the microscope with the stone cradled in both hands as though it were made of pure gold, encrusted with diamonds. The look on their faces was a sight to behold.

It turns out, that Diane was absolutely right, after all!

This was no ordinary piece of 'Glass'!

Peru State Announces 2018 Homecoming Grand Marshal

The Peru State College Student Senate announced their selection of Carlos Harrison of Shenandoah, Iowa, as the Grand Marshal of the Homecoming Parade to be held on October 6. Harris is a 1951 graduate and longtime supporter of Peru State College. "I'm very, very honored and thrilled to be named the Grand Marshal for Peru State College Homecoming," said Harrison. "Peru State means a great deal to me and I've enjoyed volunteering and being a part of the College throughout the years."

Homecoming week is set to be a busy week for Harrison, who will be turning 90 and honored on Saturday, Oct. 6, in the Homecoming Parade. As Grand Marshal, he will also be performing the coin toss for the homecoming football game vs. Baker University at 2:00 p.m.

Harrison started attending Peru State College in 1949 and was involved in chorus, band and was a member of the Music Educators Conference, now known as the National Association for Music Education. Graduating in 1951 with a Bachelor of Science in Education, Harrison went on to obtain a master's degree in education from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. He then served in the U.S. Army for two years, before eventually taking a position with Air Products and Chemicals Inc. and moving to California where he spent the next 39 years in the airline industry.

Harrison never forgets his Peru State roots. He's established not just the Walter and Lillian Harrison scholarship in memory of his parents, but also the C. Carlos Harrison alumni fund to create a usable, effective alumni house and assist with alumni activities. Harrison has assisted with calling legislators and constituents to raise awareness of Peru State College and assisted the Foundation work, with other alumni, to keep Peru State in Peru when there was once the possibility of moving to Nebraska City.

Harrison is also a member of the Peru State 1867 Society and the PSC National Alumni Association Board of Directors. He regularly volunteers to help with Freshman Moving Day, alumni activities such as the Chili Feed, Homecoming and student projects like the Phi Alpha Theta Oral History Documentary.

Under Secretary Randy Reeves Visits Peru State

Randy Reeves, Peru State alumni and the Under Secretary of Veterans Affairs for Memorial Affairs, visited Peru State College today. During his visit the Under Secretary presented to a history class and met with students over lunch. Reeves is in Nebraska ahead of a dedication of the Omaha National Cemetery's first monument to Vietnam veterans.

Reeves' presentation to the Peru State history class focused on the history, mission and vision of Memorial Affairs and the National Cemetery Administration. Videos were also shown detailing work at the Los Angeles National Cemetery and the Veterans Legacy Project at Black Hills State University.
